As my first year in the role of Vice Provost for International Affairs at CSU draws to a close, I look to the future with excitement at the opportunities that lie ahead for this office. I want to provide a brief snapshot of some of CSU’s global activity, as illustrated by the numbers.

While our international student enrollment numbers trended slightly downward this year, our colleagues at other campuses across the nation saw the same declines. With the changing political climate and stricter visa requirements, we expected this trend.

On the other hand, students continue to engage on a global level through education abroad programs, exchanges, Peace Corps service, international development studies classes, global engagement speakers, and cultural programming on CSU’s campus. Additionally, our excellent relationships with valued international partners remains as strong as ever. We also heard from many across campus that bringing more international students to campus was important for them.

With all these positive signs, I look forward to what the next years will bring for the Office of International Programs.
